REDUCING HOURS OF LABOR.

GENERAL MASTER WORKMAN POWDERLY'S LETTER TO THE ORDER.

Members Should Discuss the Eight-Hour Plan with Employers Impassionately-An Immediate Charge Cannot be Inslated Upon-Perfect a Plan of Practical Operations-Politics and the Knights.

The following letter from General Master Workman Powderly will soon appear in the Journal of United Labor. By special arrangement THE EVENING WORLD is able to print it in advance:

EVENING WORLD is able to print it in advance:

While a reduction of the hours of labor will not prove a panacea for all of the ills of the folier, it will go a great way towards easing the strain. It will go a great way towards easing the strain. It will go a great way towards easing the strain. It will allow more men to earn their own bread and become purchasers of the productions of others than at present. 'How will we manage to inaugurate the eight-hour day while the employer is opposed to it?" lat he query we hear from many. The employer need not be opposed to the eight-hour system, and he certainly will not oppose it after he gets it through his head that it is to his advantage to have all men employed. If A owns a factory, employs a thousand men, pays good wages and treats his employees well—he can afford to do so while times continue good and all other factories are running full time, or even three-quarter time, for the issuen that all of the employees of other establishments have the money to purchase the articles manufactured by some firm whose employees do purchase the product of A's factory. A reduction of 'ages in all of the other factories, and a sus, ensoin of the working force of these establishments deprive some of their employment. As a consequence, the demand it the wares of A falls off and he cannot sell the duct of A's factory. A reduction of trages in all of the other factories, and a suajension of the working force of these establishments deprive some of the men of a pirt of their menns, and others of their employment. As a consequence, the demand for the wares of A falls off and he cannot sell the quantity of goods he formerly did, and he, too, must lay off some of his men, and possibly reduces the wares of the others. It follows as antely as night follows day that one freduction of wares by an employer is soon leit by all others in a failing-off in their trade. When a number of men are thrown out of employment in one place a degression in trade is soon feit all over. It is the natural flaw, for when you cut off a man's income you curtail his purchasing power those who make the goods he buys cannot sell as toany as they did before, and other curtailments follow.

But it will injure business and create widespread disaster to disarrange the present plan and disrupt trade by insisting upon an immediate change from the ten to the eight-hour day, and it will prevent manufacturers from making contracts while they are in a state of uncertainty. No: it need not injure business a particle to begin to talk this matter over with the employer; they are as muon interested in this question as we are, and should be as eager to inaugurate a system which would employ more men to become consumers of the articles they manufacture. It need not disrupt trade to begin a gradual reduction of the hours of lawor. Let an agitation begin at this time on the question and fix a day—say Jan. 1. 1889, as the day—when manufacturers and men would agree to work nine and a half hours a day. The reduction in hours would not materially affect the welfare of either party. Pix on the list day of January, 1890, as the day on which to work nine hours, and on each succeeding year out off saif as hour from the workday until the eight-hour limit was reached. In four years, believe that very few employers of labor will object to an attempt to insufficient without a moment's warning or to reduce their wages without games that not right to expect of an employer to change from the ten to the eight hour day without a moment's notice.

The workingman who is receiving a certain sum per day makes his arrangements accordingly; he orders his provisions or supplies alead, and to all fairness his employer should give him due notice of any change contemplated by him in the way of a reduction of wages or suspension from work. The workingman makes his contracts as well as the employer, and this fact should be taken into consideration by the latter. The argument of the employers two years ago was that they had made their contracts; they were competing with others, and could not change from ten to eight hours without dhe notice or without consultation with the men. It is true, in both cases, that notice should be given and consultations held for the parpose of arranging plans for the inauguration of this system which should come soon.

During the agriation of the past two years a great deal of bitterness and bad blood have been raised by the disputes between employers and employees. To allow a continuation of this feeling will work benefit to no one, and at the earliest opportunity meetings should be held between employers and employers with a view to arriving at an understanding of what is best to do to employ as many men as possible the year round.

In this country the masses rule: those who rule are the employers, are they not? If those who rule are the employers, are they not? If those who rule are the employers, are they not? If the employers with a view to arriving at an understanding of what is best to do to employ as many men as possible the year round.

The day is coming in this land when the employer who has the meshood, the patriotism and the sense to talk in a straightforward way to his employees will be entitled to, and will receive, more of honor and wealth than the selfish fellow upon whom fortune dows and yelled "fire." No one was injured.

The fire was discovered by H. R. Murphy, who lives in the Greenwich street building. When the firemen arrived the flames had gained such headway that Chief Shay ordered a second and then a third alarm.

The great length of the building, its narrowness and the dense smoke from the burning paints and chemicals made it difficult to get at the fire, but after half an hour's persistent fighting the flames were under control.

The third floor, where the fire originated, and the two above it were occupied by Herrlein & Co., manufacturers of glass signs. Their stock is totally destroyed, and the loss is placed at $20,000. Mr. Conking's physical strength is reduced to a minimum, but he insists on rising from his bed now and again, takes one or two steps and then returns to his bed.

Ex-Judge Henry Hilton, ex-Judge Horace Russell, Edward Hilton, Dr. L. A. Tourtellot, of Uties; Col. Gebhard, W. J. Florence, Demas Barnes and Edward L. Clinton called between 10 and 11 o'clock. No one is permitted to enter the sick room.

Clerk Peacock, at the Hoffman House, has been piled with inquiries about the ex-Senabeen plied with inquiries about the ex-Sena-tor all day. Among the earliest of inquirers were ex-Gov. Hoadley, G. V. B. Frost, Gros-venor P. Lowry and Horace Barnard.

Cards bearing the names of prominent men and nearly always a line expressing sympathy have been left by the score at the hotel desk and at Mr. Conkling's door.

Ex.Gov. George Hoadley said feelingly:

"I earnestly hope that Mr. Conkling will recover and recovering, know how many men came forward as his sympathizing friends."

At 11 o'clock Mr. Conkling was sleeping fitfully, conscious at times, but delirious most of the time. Only the nurse was with nim, Dr. Anderton having left a half an hour before, with the remark that he would get a little resulte. little respite.

man of the Republican State Committee, left his card at a little past 11 o'clock.

He said: "It is a sad matter, but I hope Mr. Conkling's strong physique will stand this fearful strain. My hope amounts to a belief. Now that they have relieved him by opening the head I trust that his ultimate recovery will be but a matter of time."

Remedies by the sore have been suggested and to-day a broad-shouldered, heavily-built man called to offer his advice. His card read "Sixt Carl Kapff, Counselor-at-Law, 15-25 Whitehall street," and he stated that he suffered similarly to Mr. Conkling twelve years ago. He proposed a steam cure.

BYRNES BACK FROM CANADA

HE WILL NOT TALK OF HIS INTERVIEW WITH KEENAN.

District-Attorney Fellows Will Appear in Court To-Morrow and Ask that a Day Be Appointed for Kerr's Trial in Oyer and Terminer-Byrnes and Fellows Close Conference This Morning.

As bright and cheery as though he had just come in from a visit to Yonkers, Inspector Thomas Byrnes stepped from the Montreal train in the Grand Central Depot at 6.30 this morning.

He had not at all the appearance of a man who had just taken an all-night ride from Montreal, but he had. And there he had a long conference with John Keenan, the King of the exiled boodlers with reference to his turning informer and resuming his place and political power in New York.

The Inspectoe boarded a Madison avenue car and offered the conductor a Canadian car and offered the conductor a Canadian twen, y-five cent piece in payment of fare, but it was refused.

This same piece of money was captured by an Evening World reporter four hours later, it having fallen from Mr. Byrnes's pocket in the District-Attorney's office while he was attempting to make the reporter believe that Keevan had not recently received a visit from New York's great detective.

"I don't know whether John Keenan is coming back to New York or not. If I did—well, I'd come pretty near telling you," he said.

Col, Fellows was late in arriving and it said.

Col. Fellows was late in arriving, and it was 11.30 A. M. before the Inspector was closeted with him.

After the conference the District-Attorney said: "I will move to set a day for the trial of Thomas B. Kerr in the Oyer & Teaminer to-morrow. Inspector Byrnes was in Montreal yesterday on business connected with this office. Further than that I will say nothing."

All of the witnesses for the people have been summoned in the case of Kerr, which

All of the witnesses for the people have been summoned in the case of Kerr, which was selected for trial because the handling of the money, the proceeds of the $500,000 of bonds which were sold, it is alleged, to bribe the Aldermen, can be traced directly to him as Treasurer of the Broadway and Seventh Avenue Railroad.

The connecting link between Kerr and the bribed Aldermen is supposed to be Keenan, who was the middle man—the disbursing agent of the bribers. This, it is alleged, is the reason for Col. Fellows's anxiety to secure him for a witness.

There are others, however, who do not hesistate to impute other motives. They say that there is evidence enough without Keenan, Maloney or any of the sailed bribers to convict Kerr and that this resignation is only conducted on the part of Col. Fellows for the benefit of Keenan, who was the District Attorney's old-time friend, and whom he visited last summer in his exile.

All that is needed under the Bribery law to absolve Keenan is that he shall offer himself as the people's witness, whether he be called or not, and there be those who say that if Keenan comes back he will not "squeal," but resume his place as a political leader, which he has partially lost by his enforced absence.

Notwithstanding his "honor among thieves" reputation, his fellow-boodlers are said to feel rather nervous for rear he will not maintain it.

Kerr, who has been in Florida for his health, will be produced in court to-morrows his counsel, John H. Bird, said yesterday.

" Mrs. Sparks of Paris."

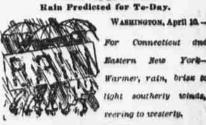

"Mrs. Sparks of Paris," by A. Curtis Bond, is novel of the "As in a Looking-Glass" type. It turns upon the eccentricities of a woman who loves more variously than discreetly, and who attempts to commit a crime only to meet with misfortune herself. The mystery of its plot should enchain the reader's thought. It is peculiarly and smoothly written and has something of the atmosphere of the French novel. Its descriptions of Paris lite are readable. It is a pleasant book for an afternoon. (Pollard & Moss, New York.) Acquittal of the Asylum Keepers.
